But how exactly does that translate into real footballers on the pitch? We sat down with the creators of the FIFA franchise to get the inside skinny on the new technology. To get the perspective of those who are tasked with creating this type of technology, we spoke with Andreas Zacharopoulos, Vice President of Product Development and Creative Director of the FIFA team at EA; and David Rutter, the Lead Gameplay Engineer at EA Sports and also the engineer who brought us the great EA FIFA 15 "Gamer's You Tube Play" video. Together, they have been responsible for developing all of EA's FIFA games. While the lead producer and animator for the Frostbite engine, Chris Reifschneider, will be telling us how the technology works and how it's being applied in FIFA 22, the two EA senior engineers also have some comments on what's new, what's cool, and how the new technology is already impacting the series.

Name: David Rutter, Lead Gameplay Engineer
Position: Lead Gameplay Engineer

How has the new Frostbite engine been adopted to make the new "HyperMotion" tech work? In FIFA we have a lot of different ways to analyze player motion, either through the internal player model or through the various player scans from motion capture at various events, and we have all these systems integrated into FIFA and we can build our AI around them. The new engine that we are using in FIFA is very loosely based on the Infor A.I. engine that I worked on a couple years back. The time line is that I was working on a version of Infor for FIFA 12, and at some point I made a quip that it would be a perfect engine to use for FIFA 14, so we have been using that engine to create FIFA's physics and other tools, and right now we are re-using the Infor engine to create the motion capture related technology for FIFA 22. So in this case, the motion-capture data comes in, we analyze that data through the motion capture-related system, and then we create the virtual player based on it using the same data - the force calculations come from the same system. So we can then start to use the same motion capture-related data to control the player with fine-tuned control, so it has a nice synergy to the motion capture data that you get from your players.

Build a virtual team and customise each of your players with all new player traits and abilities that can then be exploited on the pitch in real life. Win on the pitch and earn individual and team awards, take your club to the Champions League or the World Cup – the only limit is your imagination. FIFA Ultimate Team is available as a standalone game, or alongside FIFA 20. FIFA Ultimate Team for FIFA 20 is the same game as FIFA Ultimate Team available for FIFA 19 and past editions. There are no changes to the core experience, so if you already own FIFA Ultimate Team for FIFA 19, you can play it on all platforms.

RULES OF THE GAME Choose your tactics and strategy through gameplay that is as realistic as it is entertaining. Every touch, pass and shot is influenced by real-world factors and physical properties.

KICK AND CROSS Every strike is performed with true-to-life precision. Players can use their feet or their hands to strike a ball, but they also can use their head to dribble and head to pass.

CROUPIER Passing can be done with high precision and even parries by head or foot. There are several different types of passes you can perform with (Defensive, Defensive, Reverse, Intermediate, Forward, Short, Long and Crossing). The new Passing Award now rewards players for their passing style and the difference between short and long passes.

ROMANCE Players spend a lot of time on the pitch, which means they can also receive attention from fans and other players. Consequently, the game takes these interactions into account during gameplay and in the media.

OVERSIZE Both team and players are now able to come into contact with the ball when it's in motion, so as to come into play. This gives a realistic depth to the game.

COMPETITION ON THE SPEED Take on AI-controlled players and live opponents in this fast-paced sport, and compete in legendary stadiums around the world.

DO THE DUTY Fans, players and club directors are all very demanding. Play your role to create a winning side that resonates with fans around the world.

DROID As a player, you will now be using your head rather than the entire body to dribble. The head can be used to strike a ball, head to head, and receive a pass. However, the range of actions that are available is limited when compared to using the
