I have a new ASP.NET Core 2.2 project that uses Entity Framework Core 2.2 with ASP.NET Core 2.2 Identity. I was able to correctly initialize the Entity Framework Core context and establish a simple connection to an existing data source. When I try to execute a query like the following, there are no exceptions. `var users = await _context.Users.Where(u => u.AuthenticationId == 9).Select(u => new { u.FirstName, u.LastName, u.EmailAddress, u.PhoneNumber }).ToListAsync();` However when I modify the query slightly, like so: `var users = await _context.Users.Where(u => u.AuthenticationId == 9).Select(u => new { u.FirstName, u.LastName, u.EmailAddress, u.PhoneNumber, u.UserRoles }).ToListAsync();` ...then I get an error from the database (due to the join). Message : Error = "The following fields in the joined EntityType 'UserRole' have invalid foreign key relationships:

'FK_dbo.AspNetUserRoles_dbo.AspNetUser_Id'. 'FirstName', 'LastName', 'EmailAddress', 'PhoneNumber'". I get the error in the context, in the DataBase.cs. Why is this happening? Why is the second query more strict? Shouldn't I be able to just return the relevant columns in my results? Update 1: I attempted to add an explicit
