details. Q: Which terminology is correct: 'for' or 'with' I was writing an email to a friend and I used this line: I would like to tell you about what I am doing but I need some help for my project. I am trying to use the preposition for something that is similar to the use of with. It does not sound natural to me. A: I would say it's grammatically correct.

However, I would not use this word order. The preposition should go after the noun you are referring to. I would say something like I would like to tell you about what I am doing, but I need some help for my project. [Edit] I would like to amend my answer and say that there really isn't a rule that governs how the words should be ordered. Instead, it
